

What is BOPP, and when should I choose it instead of paper?

BOPP stands for biaxially oriented polypropylene. In simple terms, it is a durable plastic-based label material often used for packaging labels that need extra strength.

BOPP (being water-resistant) is a good choice when your labels may come into contact with moisture, condensation, oils, handling, or refrigeration. It is commonly used for takeout containers, drink cups, food packaging, delivery bags, and labels that need to stay looking clean and professional during busy restaurant service.

Glossy paper labels are sometimes the better option when you want a more economical label for dry packaging, paper bags, boxes, customer appreciation stickers, promotional labels, or short-term use. Paper can still look professional and polished, but it is usually best for packaging that will stay dry.

A simple way to choose:

Use BOPP when you want extra durability and water resistance.

Use Glossy Paper when you want a clean, professional label at a lower cost for dry packaging.
